Term	Instrument, text or publication	Provision	Definition
			Humanitarian assistance must be provided in accordance with the basic humanitarian principles of humanity, impartiality and neutrality. For the purposes of these guidelines, assistance can be divided into three categories based on the degree of contact with the affected population. These categories are important because they help define which types of humanitarian activities might be appropriate to support with international military resources under different conditions, given that ample consultation has been conducted with all concerned parties to explain the nature and necessity of the assistance – Direct assistance is the face-to-face distribution of goods and services – Indirect assistance is at least one step removed from the population and involves such activities as transporting relief goods or relief personnel – Infrastructure support involves providing general services, such as road repair, airspace management and power generation that facilitate relief, but are not necessarily visible to or solely for the benefit of the affected population
	Humanitarian Assistance, Resolution of the Institut de Droit International at its Bruges Session, 2 September 2003	Sec. I (1)	All acts, activities and the human and material resources for the provision of goods and services of an exclusively humanitarian character, indispensable for the survival and the fulfilment of the essential needs of the victims of disasters
